transported to Italy or not, is a remarkable piece of workmanship. In some way or another it must have been moved whole, for it occupied several places before finally settling down on the cliff at Loreto, overlooking the Adriatic. At one time it sat on the opposite shore and again it had a site in Loreto apart from the one now occupied. At present it is incased within an outer house of white marble, which forms the principal altar the large church that covers the whole. The house consists of only one large oblong room with brick walls. There is a door on one side and a small square win-dow at the end. Beyond this is a kind of passage with a fireplace in it, de-scribed as the kitchen. In place of the grate there is a box to receive alms, which is opened three or four times a year and into which from $15,000 to $20,000 in small coin is dropped every year by the poor Italians who flock daily to the shrine to perform their devotions. Over this fireplace stands the famous statue of the Virgin. The jewelry on the Virgin's robe alone is said to be worth $15,000,

We have seen the many useful pur-poses paper has been made to subserve, even in the construction of car-wheels, boats and houses. Now glass comes to boats and houses. Now glass comes to the front in an unexpected connection. It is said that in England glass is gradu-ally taking the place of wood and iron in the building of bridges. It is moulded into blocks, which there is a process for hardening. These blocks, it is asserted, in solidity, leave nothing to be desired. Experiments have shown surprising re-sults. The superiority of glass over the articles named is found in the fact that it is non-combustible, cannot be injured by insects, and resists corrosion.
